FEATURES

- 30 Face to Face with the Emotional Brain
COVER STORY » Amygdala responses to the facial signals of others predict both normal and abnormal emotional states. An understanding of the brain chemistry underlying these responses will lead to new strategies for treating and predicting psychopathology.
BY AHMAD R. HARIRI AND PAUL J. WHALEN

- 36 The Genes of Parkinson's Disease
The minority of Parkinson's cases now known to have genetic origins are shedding light on the cellular mechanisms of all the rest, bringing researchers closer to a cause—and perhaps a cure.
BY BOBBY THOMAS AND M. FLINT BEAL

- 42 Opening a Can of Worms
A father's determination to help his son resulted in an experimental treatment for autism that uses roundworms to modulate inflammatory immune responses. Can the worms be used to treat other diseases?
