TheScientist TOP TEN 2011 INNOVATIONS

FEATURES

- 28 Resolving Chronic Pain
The body's own mechanism for dispersing the inflammatory reaction might lead to new treatments for chronic pain.
BY CLAUDIA SOMMER
AND FRANK BIRKLEIN

- 34 Animal Mind Control
Examples of parasites that manipulate the behavior of their hosts are not hard to come by, but scientists have only recently begun to understand how they induce such dramatic changes.
BY JEF AKST

- 41 Top Ten Innovations of 2011
Our list of the best and brightest products that 2011 had to offer the life scientist

12 Editorial

Ring in the New

There is definitely no shortage of technological innovation in the life sciences.

BY MARY BETH ABERLIN

14 Notebook

Bat Luck; Lost Colony DNA; Hallowed Landfill; Cat Cravings

22 Critic at Large

An Evolving Science for an Evolving Time

Twenty-first century challenges to the public health of all the world's populations require forward-looking commitments from epidemiologists.

BY COLIN D. BUTLER

24 Thought Experiment

Pitch Perfect

Academic detailing has the potential to significantly improve clinical practice.

BY JOSEPHINE JOHNSTON

26 Modus Operandi

It's Easy Being Green

Now RNA can glow in the cell, as only proteins could in the past.

BY RICHARD P. GRANT

48 The Literature

Small-molecule inhibitors of clathrin-mediated endocytosis; mechanism of kinesin autoinhibition; a prion-like mitochondrial protein

50 Profile

High-Tech Choir Master

Elaine Mardis can make DNA sequencers sing, generating genome data that shed light on evolution and disease.
