28 Looking for Life in the Multiverse

By Alejandro Jenkins and Gilad Perez

Universes with odd physics might still be habitable.

BIOLOGY

36 The Rise and Fall of Nanobacteria

By John D. Young and Jan Martel

Once believed to be the smallest pathogens known, nanobacteria have now proved to be something almost as strange.

EARTH SCIENCE

46 Violent Origins of Continents

By Sarah Simpson

Did asteroid strikes during the earth's youth spawn the earliest fragments of today's landmasses?

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY

54 Real Money from Virtual Worlds

By Richard Heeks

Online fantasy games enable developing world entrepreneurs to make a living by trading stashes of make-believe gold for hard cash.

ENVIRONMENT

60 Local Nuclear War, Global Suffering

By Alan Robock and Owen Brian Toon

A nuclear war between India and Pakistan could cool the globe and starve much of the human race.

COMPUTERS

68 The Next 20 Years of Microchips

By the Editors

Designers are pushing all the boundaries to make integrated circuits smaller, faster and cheaper.
